the big picture:

building local resources
for a stronger community

Autism is on the rise. One in 110 children, and 1 in 70 boys, in the United States is diagnosed with autism – an incredible increase from 1 in 10,000 children when FEAT-Houston was founded 15 years ago. While it's essential that resources be directed to discovering the reason for this increase, there also are hundreds of thousands of families with children, adolescents and adults who are living with autism. How do we best support and educate individuals who have difficulty with communication and social interaction and limited flexibility and skills across many areas? More than 40 years of research in the field of behavior analysis and its application to teaching those with developmental disabilities provides a solid foundation for families and teachers who wish to change the lives of individuals with autism.

focused solutions can produce big smiles

Our vision is to meet the needs of families and professionals for training services that enable them to support the rapidly growing population of children, teens and adults with autism as they seek meaningful lives throughout the Greater Houston area.

commitment

FEAT-Houston was founded in 1995 as a non-profit organization committed to families and others who teach children with autism through applied behavioral techniques.

what works

Intensive programming using applied behavior analysis (ABA) is the primary, research-based treatment methodology for autism intervention.

building resources

FEAT-Houston works to create and support resources that enable family members and schools to access programming and certified professionals providing intensive ABA-based treatment to individuals with autism. We also focus on training support for public school teachers.

supporting families

FEAT-Houston is the only nonprofit group in Houston that provides objective support and information regarding the applied behavioral techniques and intensive programming shown to be so successful in treating and educating individuals with autism.

When a family member or teacher leaves a FEAT-Houston meeting or workshop, they walk away with a new technique or idea that can help a child with autism the very next day.

FEAT-Houston's mission is to serve the community in providing that needed support through networking opportunities, training workshops, speaker meetings and the encouragement of professional growth in the field.
